VISION AND SONG GREET'S 2001

Barnet has welcomed in the new millennium with a vision and a song - and a call to the whole community to unite to build a better future for us all.

The message from Barnet 2000, the biggest conference and festival event in the history of the borough, was that the millennium was heralding a new era in community action.

As hundreds of delegates at this historic Middlesex University conference prepared to tackle the challenges facing Barnet in the year 2000 and beyond, a choir from QE Girls School sang a song for Barnet written by Eveline Tipping.

With delegates visibly moved by musical messages urging them not to let world disaster spread, love the world and demand we should all 'protect the world for you and I', Councillor Joan Ryan, Deputy Leader of Barnet Council, praised the young people of the borough for the part they had played in facing up to the challenges ahead.

"I was thrilled at the response we got from the children of this borough when we asked them to set out their priorities in words, music and poems.

"They made it clear their concerns should be our concerns.

They said they were depending on us to tackle today's challenges to protect their futures.

"We owe them that - and everyone at this festival and conference is demonstrating we will not shirk that responsibility," said Councillor Ryan.

The conference had brought together all sectors of the community to tackle the issues concerning every individual and family.

Councillor Ryan welcomed the individuals and groups from the voluntary sector.

"I am delighted the all too often unsung heroes of our community in the voluntary sector have such a strong presence at Barnet 2000, both in the conference and workshops and with over 60 exhibits.

"This council is working closer than ever before with our voluntary sector partners as we develop together services for all our residents.

"Our shared concerns and hopes for a better future for us all as we embrace the challenges of the future are demonstrated by the issues on the conference and workshop agenda," added Councillor Ryan.

She reminded delegates that the people of Barnet had set the agenda.

"All local life is there in the agenda - the life we live today and the demands we are all making for our futures," she added.

Never too early to face challenge - Alan Williams

It is never too early to face a challenge. This was the message to delegates from Councillor Alan Williams, Leader of Barnet Council.

"When we first suggested holding a conference to plan for the millennium, some people thought it was a bit too early to arrange a party. They missed the point.

"But I know alongside the hard work we will all have tremendous fun this weekend," added Councillor Williams who chaired the main opening session of the conference.

He reminded delegates that behind the fun in the festival grounds, with its non-stop entertainment for the whole family, there was a serious job to be done.

"The planning, shaping and prioritising of services for this borough for the next six to ten years and beyond is a major task for us all. We are all working today for tomorrow. It is a tremendous event," said Councillor Williams.

The 40-plus workshops were being held in a new advanced part of the university complex.

"We are the first to use the facilities of the Williams Building - I am sure that is not just a coincidence," he added.

He thanked the business community and the voluntary sector for staging such an interesting and comprehensive range of products and service displays in the various exhibitions.

"These exhibitions, which form such a vital part of our conference, are also in the Williams building - so I can share, if only in name, their success," he added.

Reminding delegates not to miss the entertainment at the Festival today and tomorrow, he revealed that the Council had commissioned first-day postage stamp covers to mark the conference and festival.

It was fitting that the event should be celebrated in this way - Barnet was making history with the first conference of its kind in London.

Don't believe everything you read - Pauline Green

In a keynote speech to delegates to Barnet 2000, Pauline Green MEP and Leader of the Socialist Group in the European Parliament, said Europe was alive and kicking in Barnet and warned against believing the tabloid press version of what Europe was all about.

"I am a Londoner and proud of it, I'm British and proud of it, and I'm European and proud of it. There was no conflict between them," she told delegates.

"Eurosceptics are doing irreparable damage to Britain's image in Europe with their attempts to claim that Europe is trying to destroy our way of life,"

TWO BARNETS NOT ACCEPTABLE

'Families living below poverty line'

that the council and the people of the borough were not being parochial. "We have extended our horizons certain in the knowledge that what happens outside this borough impacts on us all. We all believe we also have a contribution to make to the well-being of that wider community outside Barnet.

"The issues we tackle during this momentous weekend will be the same issues facing every other part of the country."

Every sector of the community, the young, the old, families with young children, users of social services, their carers, those with special interests in transport, education, business, health and the environment were having their say in three days of debate alongside specialists and experts in every aspect of life in the borough.

One of the problems confronting Barnet was its image of a green, leafy and prosperous borough.

"There is another Barnet - a hidden Barnet. This invisible Barnet affects us all. It has pockets of high unemployment and deprivation.

"One in three children in Burnt Oak and Colindale live in households with no one in employment. This means these families live on income support - they live below the poverty line.

"We cannot stand by and let this happen. Two Barnets is unacceptable. We must have a united community.

"Just by being at this conference we are making a statement - we are saying we want to build a better borough and North London for us all," added Councillor Ryan.

The enthusiasm and commitment of the whole community had brought the idea for the Barnet 2000 conference to life.

"The messages in this conference are coming from people who really count - our community," added Councillor Ryan.

The business community in Barnet has backed the conference and festival with companies large and small sponsoring events, advertising in conference publications and exhibiting.

"Without the support of businesses we could not have staged Barnet 2000. This proves businesses have accepted that it is only as partners with the whole community can local economies prosper and develop.

Barnet 2000 would deliver real results to the people of the borough.

Councillors and council officers did not have all the answers to issues confronting the people of Barnet.

The council had already launched two years ago the biggest consultation programmes ever seen in the borough, introduced forums to tackle individual services and others to breathe the new life into town centres.

"There are no short cuts to building a better, fairer, more economically-viable borough. We need the input of the whole community as we plan for the future," she said.

Following the conference, the council will produce a new four-year-plan encompassing the best innovative ideas and long-term targets developed during the three days of debate.

"We are not promising a panacea - a cure-all which will solve the problems of years of under-funding for local authorities like Barnet. This conference, this vision-setting event, will show us what needs to be done and the priorities of the community," added Councillor Ryan.

One of the many stalls in the voluntary sector organisations' exhibition area is the Soldiers, Sailors and Airmen's Association stand.

FUNDING CRISIS FOR VOLUNTARY GROUPS

Visitors to Barnet 2000 were left in no doubt about the crucial role that voluntary groups play in providing key services to the local community.

Leading the debate in the workshop, "Local Authorities are not the Sole Providers", was Stuart Etherington, Chief Executive of the National Council for Voluntary Organisations, who has been involved in managing voluntary organisations throughout his career and is a noted commentator on the subject.

He pointed to a new crisis in funding brought about by the National Lottery and called for a new relationship with the voluntary sector and the state.

Despite criticism from the voluntary sector, about £350m is still being distributed through National Lottery grants and this has dented public confidence in the traditional charities which are suffering as a result.

This situation has not been helped by fears over the probity and effectiveness of traditional charities.

On top of this, corporate giving has come to a standstill as has tax saving gifts. Coupled with a real decline in legacies - a staggering drop of more than 20 per cent in three years - problems are mounting for organisations which want to remain key players in providing services to the community.

Delegates at the workshop called for a major re-think in the relationship between the government and the voluntary sector.

The government has shifted the emphasis in recent years from grants to contracts with individual organisations. For many this means that the voluntary sector is losing its independence, becoming just agents for the state.

This gloomy outlook however, will not dampen the spirits of those dedicated people who work day in day out for the community and the flood of ideas which came out of the discussion pointed the way to a better future.

Barnet Council Leader, Councillor Alan Williams, got into the spirit of the occasion when he paid a visit to the Hendon Football Club stand on the first day of the Barnet 2000 Conference and Festival.

SINGALONG WITH CHILDREN

Delegates will have the chance to join children from Whittings Hill School in a singalong tomorrow (Sunday) in the Main Hall at Barnet 2000 between 10 and 11am.

The children have been working on songs and essays on how they see their future and the borough's as we head for the millennium.

Thirteen-year-old Sachim Duggal, from Queen Elizabeth Boys school will also be giving his views on the future. Sachim is already an expert at public speaking, as he has already spoken on how he sees the future from an environmental perspective at the International Children's Conference held in Eastbourne this year.

BARNET YOUNG BEST PREPARED FOR EUROPE

invented Mad Cow Disease and want to create a super state. Nothing could be further from the truth," she said.

Barnet Council was praised for the way it embraced the idea of Europe and recognised that if the borough's young people are to know and understand what the future holds they must have access to the opportunities and understand the challenges offered by Europe.

Because of the initiatives already underway in Barnet, young people here are "not only well prepared for Europe but among the best prepared in London".

She pointed to the 'Safe Start' project, helping the young, homeless and unemployed, the Moxton Street Industrial Site which gives access to work and dignity for the disabled, and a growing list of Barnet projects helped with European funds.

She highlighted the work being done in the borough's schools, even primary schools, getting involved in a vast range of projects and making young people at ease with their European neighbours and partners.

"This is what Europe in action is all about. This is my kind of Europe - supporting the local environment, creating jobs, enhancing skills.

"The world is changing," she said. "We are now in what is almost a second industrial revolution. New technology advances at breathtaking speed. Every worker has a gut feeling that this is true. People know it. No longer can one country by itself generate long-term future prosperity.

"Unemployment is growing across Europe - the equivalent of the entire populations of Denmark, Belgium and Ireland are without work. Eighteen million unemployed, 25 per cent of them young people. We must be prepared to work in partnership with our neighbours to meet the challenges of structural unemployment," she said.

She had reassuring words for those concerned about the future of the welfare state and its key role in every European country.

On the European currency, she told her audience to be under no illusion that it will happen and that some countries are well on the way to making it a reality.

She pointed to the big increase in European money coming into Barnet. Barnet was seen as a prosperous leafy suburb and its deprived areas were often overlooked when it came to deciding priorities.

"I am working closely with your council to bring that help to the areas that need it most. Europe is important for Barnet, just as Barnet is important in Europe. They need our active participation to create a prosperous future for all of us.

"I want us to become more involved, and the fact that Barnet 2000, a superb initiative, has included Europe at the top of the agenda, is a sign of good things to come," she said.

SPOTLIGHT ON YOUTH

The future of Barnet Youth and the long-term needs of the young people of North London goes under the spotlight at Barnet 2000.

Alongside Middlesex University there will be a forest of marquees with a non-stop round of activities specifically designed to interest young people.

"Young people will be making their contribution to tackling the problems of today as we prepare for the new millennium.

"They will be discussing wide-ranging issues of concern to them, from healthy living, leisure and the arts, to personal relationships, substance abuse, employment, jobs training and the environment," said Councillor Joan Ryan.

"Young people will be quizzing their local councillors on the borough's plans in Youth Action Panels.

There will be live entertainment for the whole family when local young people join professional performers on stage.

Help Yourself

By coming to us for advice, tens of thousands of local people are now better qualified, better trained and better equipped to be in control of their careers.

Add to that the fact that, last year alone, we successfully helped nearly 1500 people out of long-term unemployment and into jobs, as well as helping over 365 people start up their own businesses, and it's no wonder we pride ourselves on our professional approach.

So, whether you're looking for a change of direction or a fresh start, we can help you to help yourself.

GNVQs
(General National Vocational Qualifications)

GNVQs are a broad qualification, providing students with a knowledge and understanding of a chosen vocational area. They are available at three levels, Foundation, Intermediate and Advanced, and are an alternative to academic programmes such as GCSE or A Level. GNVQ Advanced levels are accepted as an alternative to A Level for entry to university.

- Business
- Health and Social Care
- Built Environment (Foundation and Intermediate only)
- Leisure and Tourism
- Science
- Hospitality and Catering
- Engineering
- Information Technology

NVQs (National Vocational Qualifications)

NVQs are based on standards set by industry and commerce, and provide students and employees with a practical base to their knowledge and skills that is recognised by employers. Each NVQ relates to a particular occupation, and can be awarded in up to five levels. Hendon College offers a wide range of NVQ courses - a copy of the full course selection is available in our prospectus.

A Level

We offer a wide range of subjects at A Level, covering humanities, sciences and business. We have a full-time course over 2 years for those who are new to A Levels, plus a 1 year programme for students who wish to improve their A Level grades.

GCSE

A wide choice of GCSE subjects is available to student on a 1 year programme

BTEC

Our BTEC courses provide students with vocational qualifications which are widely recognised by employers, and can also lead to higher education. We have BTEC National Diplomas in:

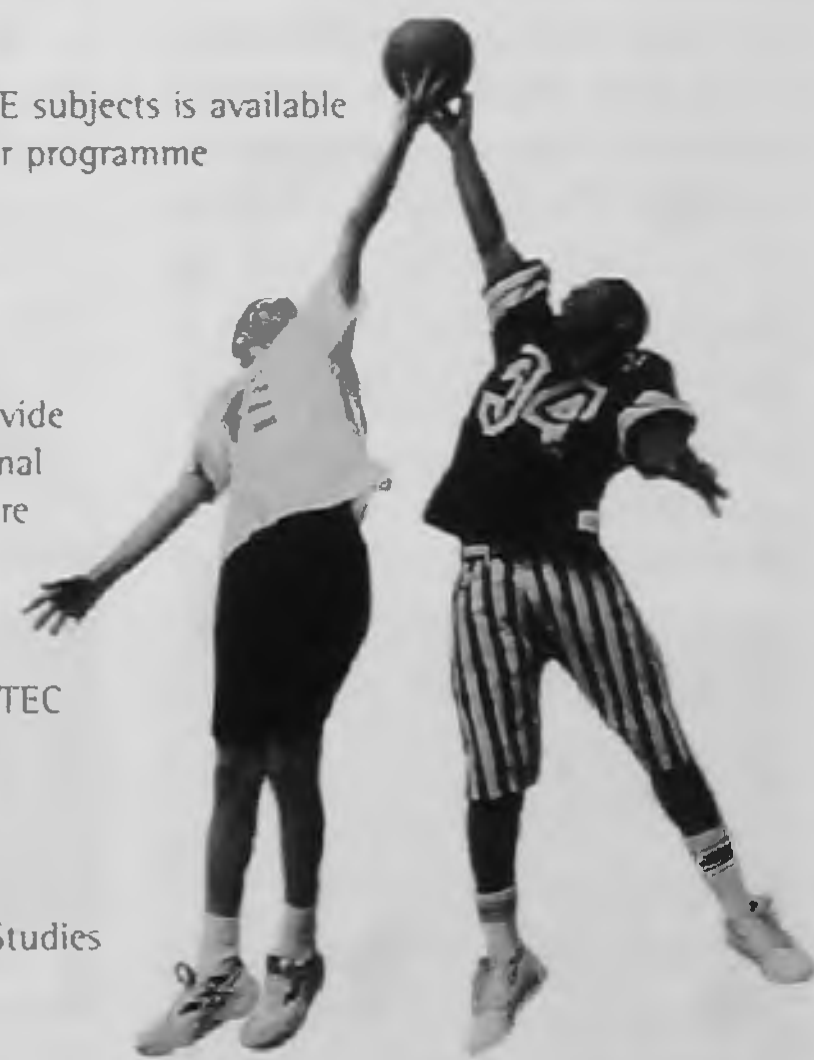

- Computing
- Media Studies
- Early Childhood Studies

Flexible learning

If you would like to improve your qualifications but cannot attend college either on a full-time or part-time basis, you may wish to consider Flexible Learning.

Working from home, your study time will be flexible, however, you will be expected to work to a schedule and your assignments will still have to be submitted on time! You will be allocated a tutor who will be responsible for you throughout your period of study and you will be invited to attend regular tutorials.

As one of our students you will be able to use all of our college facilities including the Learning Resource Centres and Libraries. Studying at home is not the easiest option but we give you as much support as you need.

ROCKING INTO THE NEXT CENTURY

An exciting array of top pop talent will lead Barnet singing and dancing into the next century today and tomorrow.

Two days of non-stop live entertainment for the whole family will be the fun side of Barnet 2000.

While the serious business of drawing up a blueprint for future services to Barnet people goes on indoors, a thrilling musical festival can be enjoyed outside.

Launching the musical festival today on centre stage at 1pm are Marrakesh Express.

Singer Jenny Baker, guitarist Rod Allen and drummer George Conway will be playing a range of pop and rock hits from the 50s to the 90s.

Memories of glitter jackets, platform shoes and outrageous flares will be stirred by another act, glam rock legends Sweet

AD.

If you remember those stirring smash hits of the 70s Blockbuster, Ballroom Blitz and Hellraiser, you will be prepared to rock to one of the most entertaining groups around.

Sweet A.D. have 15 years of experience playing before audiences throughout the world and music-lovers can look forward to them playing a selection of Sweet's 16 major hits.

Martyn Joseph, an internationally acclaimed singer-songwriter, will then take over with the festival in full swing at 7pm.

Martyn has reached the Top 40 with his recent song Dolphins Make Me Cry and he is releasing a new album called Full Colour Black and White this month. He has toured with top artists like Joan Armatrading, Chris De Burgh, Celine Dion and Art Garfunkel.

North London favourites Soutax, a popular 22 piece Motown band, will end Saturday night with a bang.

Then the music starts again on Sunday at noon, including Life In The Fast Lane, playing the best songs of world-famous rock group The Eagles, famous for such hits as Hotel California, just like the real thing.

They are followed by Arena, a now firmly established rock group who released their first album Songs From The Lion's Cage last year.

The festival is being sponsored by Ivor Arbiter, local businessman and chairman of the Arbiter Group, the largest independent musical instrument distributors in the country.

Have your cake and eat it... Councillor Alan Williams, Leader of Barnet Council (right), launched Barnet Council's Employees' Credit Union on the first day of Barnet 2000. He is joined by Paul Edwards (centre) from Barnet UNISON and Richard Parry (left) from the Co-operative Bank plc who are providing banking facilities for the credit union.

CREDIT UNIONS - MAKING SENSE OF YOUR MONEY

Part of anti-poverty strategy

Yesterday saw the launch of Barnet Council's first employee credit union which is one of the council's key elements in working to combat poverty.

Credit Unions are a self-help answer to easy savings and low-cost loans. The council is already working in the community to start-up credit unions for residents living in Burnt Oak and Grahame Park.

Credit unions are the easy way for everyone, even those on low incomes, to take control of their finances.

Members who save a regular sum can then borrow up to double what they have saved at a low interest rate, currently 12 per cent compared to a bank overdraft with charges ranging from 16 to 18 per cent, credit card companies who charge 25 to 28 per cent and store cards at over 30 per cent.

Councillor Alan Williams, Leader of Barnet Council, was member number one to sign up at the launch.

"Helping to form credit unions for both employees and residents is one of the most important parts of this council's anti-poverty strategy. These unions will help those residents and employees who are prevented for economic reasons from using regular forms of banking", said Councillor Williams.

"So often these people will fall prey to loan sharks, putting them into a spiral of debt, which is practically impossible to break. Credit unions offer these people the chance to take control of their finances," he added.

The employee credit union launch at Barnet 2000 has been sponsored by the Co-operative Bank plc who are providing banking services for the union and who supported the launch.

"We are really pleased to be associated with the Barnet Council employees' credit union. It reflects the values and ethics the Co-operative Bank stands for," said Richard Parry of the Co-operative Bank.

Maria Wood, who works as a careworker in the Community Services Directorate said: "The employee credit union is open to everyone who works for Barnet, including councillors. It will be able to give them a better standard of living and a common bond which belongs to everyone".

TRANSPORT INTO THE 21ST CENTURY

Keeping Barnet on the move in the next century was a theme guaranteed to tax the imagination of all delegates to the key transport debates during Barnet 2000.

A whole session was set aside to tackle head-on one of the most challenging tasks facing Barnet and beyond as we enter the new millennium.

The workshop "Transport into the 21st Century" brought together representatives of the whole community who have a stake in working towards a saner transport system for London.

Led by Terence Bendixson, a transport policy analyst with international experience, the workshop explored the problem of making different types of transport meet people's needs.

It focused on the fact that as this century draws to a close having a car has come within the grasp of a huge percentage of the population who will not easily give up the freedom it seems to bring.

The workshop surveyed the damage this causes the environment and the health of people of all ages and looked at the alternatives.

Terence Bendixson, whose role as champion of the pedestrian is well-known through his books and articles as urban planning correspondent of 'The Guardian', put his own thoughts on the subject to the test before a critical audience.

Transport policy is a high-priority problem which will only be resolved for London through co-operation and agreement between local authorities and the residents they are there to serve.

Barnet 2000 is making a major contribution towards finding solutions to today's traffic chaos and the views and ideas of our own residents and traders will enable Barnet Council to speak with one voice when the rest of London joins the debate.

PLAYING THE GAME

Fourteen teams of young people, boys and girls from the borough's youth clubs, will take part in a knock-out five-a-side football tournament during the Youth Festival.

The tournament on the sports pitch at the rear of Middlesex University starts at 12 noon on Sunday.

The tournament will last for about three hours and include 21 games.

THE SHAPE OF LOCAL COUNCILS TO COME

Local councils may need to be more flexible and adopt new strategies to quickly adapt to the rapidly changing needs of their communities in the future.

This was one of the messages of a workshop session titled "Local Authorities in the 21st Century" yesterday.

But the aim of the whole conference is to incorporate the innovative ideas produced by the community in all the workshops in future Barnet Council policies.

Only by listening to the authentic voice of the whole community and developing its best ideas can councils like Barnet prepare for the future.

The workshop considered whether the institution of local government can adapt to meet the needs of our local communities in the future.

In a week when Members of Parliament controversially voted themselves a large pay increase, delegates expressed support for the idea that councillors should be paid for their duties. At the moment they receive only a limited allowance.

Delegates believed there should be programmes to develop "active citizens" and measures to ensure bureaucracy does not get in the way of local initiatives.

Local people should be more involved in the delivery services at the design stage, they said.

There was also support for the creation of a strategic authority for London. Delegates were also clear that the new authority should not interfere at local level but should concentrate on strategy.

The universal view was that local government is an essential institution, not least as "a bulwark against tyranny".

The idea communications between local government and local communities need to be greatly improved also won support.

Barnet is leading the way with Barnet 2000 in planning ahead now to shape new services to suit the needs of local people up to the year 2000 and beyond.

The session considered whether council services should be more localised than they are now or should make better use of partnerships with community organisations.

Delegates looked at how important technological change would be for councillors, council officers and the communities they serve.

The main speakers during the workshop were Phil Gagg, principal quality officer in Islington Council, and Steve Bullock, former Leader of Lewisham Council and star of the TV programme "The Town Hall".

Steve Bullock also chaired the Local Government Management Board so he worked both sides of the table in local government before setting up as a consultant working for Capita.

NEW CENTURY – NEW START

Welcome for Agenda 21

New century – new start. This is the message going out to residents' groups throughout the borough this summer and autumn as Barnet asks the whole community to play a part in protecting and improving the environment.

Barnet Council has adopted the concept of Local Agenda 21 - an international plan agreed at the Rio Earth Summit which calls on local authorities to work with the community to create its own vision and plans to protect the environment.

The Local Agenda 21 issue will feature prominently during Barnet 2000.

The council, following the success of its Friary Park Local Agenda 21 Initiative, is looking at a borough-wide programme involving all sectors of the community in producing a strategy for Barnet with a set of measurable targets to be achieved in the months and years ahead.

In the workshop session Agenda 21, a new century - a new start, led by Chris Church who has worked on local and national environmental issues for 16 years, delegates heard that to involve the community their basic needs had to be met.

The launch of the Victoria Partnership Agenda 21 programme was welcomed.

Delegates also welcomed the publication of a guide for business and the launch of neighbourhood information packs to encourage local groups.

There was also a call for increasing mobility for all residents but a reduction in the number of cars.

The Faculty Books stall proved popular during the first day of Barnet 2000. The stall had books on every subject from computers to politics, media to cookery and history to psychology.

ORDINARY LIVING FOR SPECIAL PEOPLE

The workshop called "Ordinary Living for Special People" explored how with support people with special needs can lead full lives in their own homes within the community.

The debate came in the same week Barnet Housing Committee councillors agreed an exciting new partnership with a housing association to provide homes with full care support for people with mental health difficulties.

This shows how determined Barnet Council is to ensure its conference at Middlesex University in Hendon to plan better services up to the year 2000 and beyond leads to action not just talk.

The workshop focusing on special needs housing examined why people suffer from exclusion and stigma in the community and how positive action can be taken to combat this.

Key speaker was Kate Morton, Community Services Manager for Notting Hill Housing Trust.

Delegates agreed the country needs to move from Segregation to Integration for people to live in the community they must be integrated within it.

It was also felt the community must be involved in planning developments from an early stage.

All agencies need to work in partnership to achieve real results, said delegates.

Kate Morton heads a unit providing direct support and care services for tenants and residents in eight London boroughs with over 600 bed spaces in management. She has wide knowledge of housing issues and a particular interest in housing for people with mental health and learning disability.

Just some of the delegates who packed the Main Hall for the start of Barnet 2000

THE COMMUNITY MUST CARE

Giving local people the power to build a new caring community for the next century was a key theme on the first day at Barnet 2000.

The conference workshop, "Why should a Community Care?" was aimed at bringing together the whole community to develop fresh ideas and initiatives to care for vulnerable people living in Barnet.

The speaker was Dick Atkinson, Director of the Birmingham-based social and urban regeneration project Phoenix.

He has written about citizenship, empowerment and social exclusion and is experienced in working with and developing partnerships in multi-cultural communities.

He told delegates of the need for the community to fill what he called "the hole in the social ozone layer" by getting together and identifying specific local needs then tackling them head-on.

He argued strongly that carers in the community should be valued more and have greater status.

Carers and voluntary workers must not be treated as if they were 'just unemployed'. They were employed, just not paid.

He could not agree with those who thought that social services and community work was about 'all of them' rather than being about all of us.

The debate looked at how we can take responsibility for vulnerable people in need of support to become fully integrated into community life.

The true meaning of citizenship, social responsibility, even the meaning of the word 'community', provoked a wide range of views.

POETRY IN MOTION

Facing the challenge of the new millennium is 'poetry in motion' for pupils from Barnet's schools.

Putting into verse their ideas on the challenges facing us all has captured the imagination of Barnet's youngsters. Pupils from Clitterhouse Junior School, in Cricklewood, have created their own odes to a fairer, cleaner, safer year 2000 and beyond.

Ten year old Hayley Bazen wonders where she will be in the year 2000.

*"Up in space,
Just my friends and me,
Will I be driving along with Lee,
Or will I be dancing on TV?"*

An astronaut at fourteen? The prospects look good for Barnet's young people who will be attending the youth festival that is a vital part of this three-day conference organised by and for the local community.

Perhaps eleven year old Rebecca Boakes will visit the Environmental and Safety marquee after writing:

*"In the year 2000
There will be less pollution,
Solar panels on cars solution."*

And schoolmate Rinehart Appiah will be interested in the Health and Fitness marquee after asking:

*"Will there be an invention
To stop germs and nervous tension?"*

Several of the poems reflected the children's concerns about computer technology. Eleven year old Debbie Daodu suggests that by the turn of the millennium:

*"Maybe computers will give people trouble
And make others get into a muddle."*

Those who visit the Barnet 2000 Youth Festival will be given the chance to get hands on experience of the latest computer technology.

There is plenty going on for Barnet's youth. The younger children will be treated to free events including mad explorer Professor Wally Wingbat, the Openwide Theatre Company and the Circus Skills Workshop.

YOUTH FESTIVAL

investing in all our futures

Young people are our future - and the Barnet 2000 Youth Festival acknowledges and celebrates that.

Youth is one of the main themes of the Barnet 2000 Conference - and both within the conference centre and the festival grounds alongside it, young people will be making their contribution to tackling the problems of today as we prepare for the new millennium.

While many young people will be directly involved in workshops and conference sessions, their main arena will be the Youth Festival throughout Saturday 13 July and Sunday 14 July.

Young people of all ages will come in their hundreds from schools and youth centres throughout the borough.

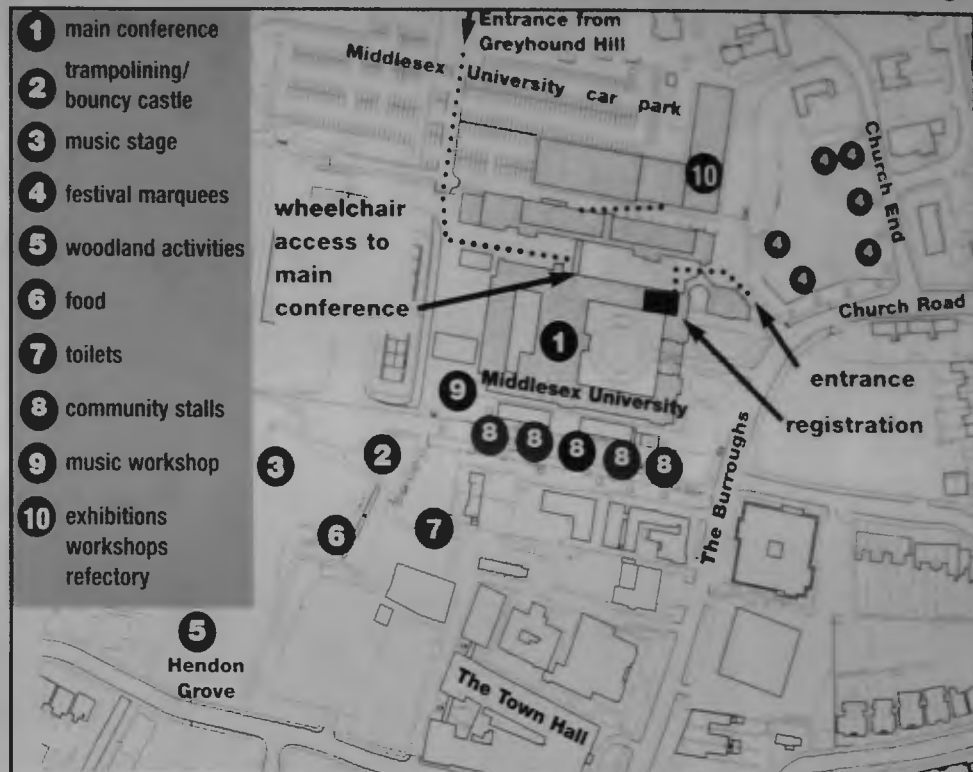

The Barnet 2000 Youth Festival has been designed by young people for young people.

The free festival and live entertainment, provided by well-known professional performers and young people from the borough's schools and youth centres, adds a lighter note to the major issues being debated in the marquee village.

The event is open to the whole family - and all the attractions and shows are free.

IT'S TIME EVERY HOME AND BUSINESS IN BARNET MOVED

Videotron is bringing cable to Barnet. Communications can now move at the speed of light. So don't get left behind.

Cable means cheaper phone calls.* Easier access to satellite TV, multi-channel TV and the Internet. It will be your link to a new interactive world of entertainment and information. For business it's the gateway to a new generation of communication systems - from Off-site extensions to ATM, from ISDN to Intranet.

Don't watch it pass you by. Come and see the benefits for yourself.
